

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The central theme of this thesis has been the development of communities of shared praxis, and I wish to thank the many communities that challenged and supported me on the journey to its completion.

First, I wish to thank members of the academic community, Professor Norah Jones and Professor David Turner, who guided and supported me through the intricacies of research. A special word of gratitude to Professor Jean McNiff, my study supervisor, for her patience, encouragement, exacting standards and gracious support and belief in me. Her epistemology of accompaniment would make Donovan (1978) proud.

A special word of thanks to my Christian Brother community, for their support at all times during my research and for the many affirming and challenging experiences of community life.

To the community of the two Education Offices, Ferdia, Tony and Sean, who are always a pleasure to work with, for their good-humoured support of my research and practice.

To the school community, especially Roddy, Paul and Teresa, Caitriona and Grainne, who have such great trust in me and were a wonderful support at every stage of my research. To them, their students and to all the dedicated teachers and students from schools all over the country, I am deeply grateful.

To the Omagh Edmund Rice Camp community, especially Hanora and Brian, and all the young leaders, for their extraordinary commitment, enthusiasm and incredible generosity in the service of the children in their care, a big 'Thank you!' It is indeed a great honour to work alongside you all. This thesis is truly 'our thesis'!

Finally, a special word of thanks to my first community, my mother, brothers and sisters, and to all the wonderful friends who enrich my life, who had to take second place so often during the course of my research, and without whose support, this thesis would not have been completed.
